

The Well

Improvisational rock band for hire.

The Well, based in Norwalk, CT., formed in the fall of 2001, its original setup as a quartet. Old friends Peter Stuart and Trent Lewis came in as the guitar players of the band, Paul Bellucci as the drummer. Bassist Max Squire completed their original format. Keyboard player John Konya joined the band in August 2006.

The Well has been playing live in the Connecticut and NYC region for the past four years. Over that time they have built a dedicated fan base. Playing for such a long period has made their musical interplay second nature; the type of synchronicity only comes after many years of working together. With the release of their album of original material they are looking to spread their music further.

The Well has always made its artistic focus live shows. Their concerts range from boot shaking blues, cow tipping country, soul elevating improvised rock, to grovin reggae. For The Well its about not only making sure the audience has a great time, but taking the audience to different places, to a higher place if only for a while.

Their recently released album is the product of their diverse musical interests and love of improvisational jamming. The Albums' focus is on songwriting, not instrumental solos for their own sake, but improvised musical passages to support the song structure. Their sound could perhaps be described as a mix of country, blues, rock, and funk, usually not fitting in any one realm for too long. The songwriting topics on the October Sessions range from tales of outlaws, to hurricane Katrina's aftermath, to lost love and redemption.

The Well is currently available to book for either electric or acoustic performances.
